

Take a $292 Round-trip Flight to Sweden This Fall

by Melanie Lieberman March 10, 2017

For less than $300 total, travelers on the East Coast can take a trip to Sweden. As reported by The Points Guy, the airfare deal is available on flights between October and mid-December 2017.

The best deals to Stockholm are available with budget airline Norwegian Air, though inexpensive tickets can also be found on Finland's flag carrier, Finnair.

Travelers must be able to depart from either New York City (flights originate at John F. Kennedy International Airport) or Fort Lauderdale, Florida. All trips terminate in Stockholm.

To book, look for flights on your favorite search engine, keeping in mind the travel window. The $292 tickets, for example, are for trips departing on November 15 and returning November 20. We also found $305 round-trip fares for flights leaving on December 2 and returning December 11. Florida-based travelers can find tickets as low as $345 round-trip during this time period (think: November 28 until December 8).

Before you book, The Points Guy recommends checking the flights on the local, Norwegian version of this carrier's site, where additional savings can often be found.

And for frequent fliers who prefer traveling with Finnair (for either amenities or miles) tickets are selling for $341 round-trip from New York City to Sweden.