

T+L • AIRLINES + AIRPORTS

Finnair's New Design Will Be Even More Incredibly Nordic

Courtesy of Finnair

CAILEY RIZZO DECEMBER 06, 2017

A trip to Finland can last until your plane has landed back home.

Finnair, the country's flag carrier, is adding more Finnish culture into its flight service, including new fabrics from design giant Marimekko in the business class cabin and a new traditional menu offering.

Marimekko, which has earned cult status in and out of Finland since its launch in the 1960s, will design “new seat textiles and comfort amenities ... inspired by Nordic homes and landscapes,” David Kondo, Finnair’s head of cabin interior development, told Business Traveller.

Related: How to See the Northern Lights on a Trip to Finland

The collection “has been specially designed to add a light and fresh visual dimension to the on-board experience,” according to the airline.

Courtesy of Finnair

And passengers' food choices are getting more Finnish, too. Cabin crew will begin serving "Kahvikutsut," a Finnish snack of coffee and a sweet treat, between meal services. Passengers will be able to choose from traditional Finnish sweets like Carelian pies, cinnamon buns, coffee cake, or Finnish chocolates.

The meal service menus will also be revamped with a heavier emphasis on Nordic-style cooking by Swedish chef Tommy Myllymäki.

Courtesy of Finnair

A new, more Finnish version of Finnair will premiere on flights to Seoul, Tokyo and Shanghai, starting Feb. 7, 2018. It will roll out gradually to remaining long-haul destinations in spring and summer.

Related: Here's the Kind of Suitcase You Need to Get Around New Baggage Bans

While many of the new designs and amenities are focused on business class, economy passengers can also expect a Marimekko collection pillow and blanket at their seat.