Flight Deal: U.S. and Canada to Europe from $377 Round-Trip

Houstonians can jet to Málaga, Spain for a steal right now.

Get ready to hop across the Atlantic this fall or winter.

Europe in the fall means fewer tourists, lower hotel prices, and—if you book today—airfares for a steal. American, Air Canada, Air France, British Airways, Finnair, Iberia, Alitalia, Delta, Swiss, and United are all offering round-trip flights from 39 U.S. and Canadian cities to 22 European destinations, starting at under $400.

Scott Keyes of Scott's Cheap Flights spotted the deal earlier today, which has us—yet again—dreaming of a jaunt to Europe. While not all of these flights are non-stop, look carefully and you'll find some true bargains, like a direct flight from Newark to Zurich for $377, or Paris for $426. It's also good to note that flights to each European destination in the deal aren't available from every departure city—we're jealous of Houstonians, for example, who can jet to Málaga, Spain for just $493 round-trip.

But no matter what city you choose—whether it be Barcelona, Brussels, Geneva, London, or Amsterdam—the deal is good for a trip between September 2017 and March 2018 (and that includes Thanksgiving, although excludes Christmas and New Year's). Keyes predicts these flights won't last long (just 24 hours), so move now to skip the $850 price tag that normally accompanies flights to Europe during these months. Plus, just imagine how much wine and cheese that extra couple of hundred you're saving on the ticket could purchase once you touch down.

How to book: As with most deals, the flexible flier scores the biggest discount. Plug your desired dates into Google Flights. The best deals will be in green. And if you're really digging for the cheapest flights, then search your preferred flights in Momondo for the absolute lowest price.
