Indian travel expert Susan Geringer is offering a grand experience called "Gourmet India 2011" a sixteen day journey of India's best cities and flavorful foods, to those who love adventure and have the taste for bold, spicy Indian food. Celebrated Chef, Prasad Chirnomula, who received the James Beard House honor in 2007, will be the star attraction. Travelers will stay in the country's most exquisite hotels while noshing on treats from North to South to places like Delhi, Agra, Udaipur, Mumbai, Goa, Kochi and Kumarakom.

Prices for "Gourmet India 2011" start at $12,910 per person and eager travelers depart on October 24, 2011. (If you don't know that much about Indian foods, check out the Squire's EATING AROUND column, where Scott Haas' gave us the skivvy on eating Indian: <http://www.travelsquire.com/columns/food-column/item/344-eating-in-india>)

Foodies will fill their stomachs to the brim while learning the secrets of spices and curries, and learning how to make authentic Indian meals by proficient chefs. Chef Prasad Chirnomula knows some of the best classic and modern Indian dishes, being the owner and executive chef of five Thali restaurants. Chirnomula's Thali restaurants are the first to be rated exceptional by the New York Times for Indian cuisine.
