'Angry Birds' Takes to the Skies, But For Real Though

September 8, 2011 at 10:20 AM | by JetSetCD | Comments \(0\)

We're going to tell you something you already know: the iPhone game Angry Birds is big. Huge. Ginormous. It's so big that, the other day during a stroll through a night market in Thailand, we spotted many stalls with bootleg Angry Birds T-shirts, tank tops and even flip-flops for sale. Thus it's probably no surprise that of course the airlines are trying to capitalize on the Angry Birds fervor, though not in the way you'd expect.

You know what would be cool? Adding the Angry Birds game to in-flight entertainment. You know what would be kinda weird? Theming an entire flight after the game, and offering Angry Birds' biggest fans to fly it. According to The Independent, that's what Finnair is doing with their "Angry Birds Asian Challenge" flight:

The flight, which takes off September 20 from Helsinki to Singapore, will allow travelers to play Angry Birds on board using games consoles distributed to passengers and programmed especially for the event. Finnair says that service and entertainment aboard the flight will also be with 'Angry Birds style', adding - rather alarmingly - that a 'real angry bird' will also be on board.

If you're someone who would cough up some Baht to buy the "Angry Birds Addict" shirt pictured above, then you might want to apply to get in on this flight. You can do try for a seat HERE, but beware that it is something of a popularity contest involving Facebook.

So how long do you think it'll take for Finnair to slap some Angry Birds livery on a plane? Now that's something we want to see.
